If leaving the customs Cruizer's in charge of the the step taken by Chief-Justice SMALE be wreck. productive of this result, the Community of liongkong will be greatly indebted to him for having moved in the matter; and it is a subject of congratulation to find that the lengthened comments which have been made have not been fruitless. The remarks which were published in this paper, especially those with regard to the Registrar General's Office, and its detrimental effects in connection with the District Watchmen, were at one time not a little misunderstood. They were looked upon as more than the occasion required, or as, at most, being the reiteration of a comparatively unimportant grievance. It may be confidently concluded that at the present time the importance of the matter will not be considered to have been over-estimated. Our contention throughout this discussion has simply been that the divided authority resulting from the Registrar-General's Department, the District Watchmen, and Mr. D. R. CALDWELL'S Runners, utterly disorganised the Police Force; and we now find that Chief-Justice SMALE substantially concurs in the whole of those views.

With respect to the celebrated Sowkewan and Holworthy murder cases, and the prosecutions for perjury which took place in connection with them, we have either rightly or wrongly taken throughout a different view of the subject to that which is given out by the Gin-S-ratio): and are some stall below the state of the life of the large state of th the Chief-Justice; and we cannot still help thinking that in concluding that the Policeor at least the European portion of them-

But if this cabdriver is to be congratulated at having been allowed to kill an old woman without knowing it, and then escaping ecot-free, our warmest congratulations are due to Mr. John Shannon, fur shire, who has indeed reason to be glad that he dwells in this land of liberty. According to the newspapers, Mr. Shannon was on Monday brought up at the Killegrove Petty Sessions "on a serious charge of \neglect of duty," and truly the charge was rather serious; for it appeared from the evidence that Shannon had left his furnace and "gone drinking," and that, in consequence, the supply of fresh air required for the ventilation of the pit was so much reduced that had any of the three or four hundred persons in the working's been using a defective lamp, there would, in all probability, have been a repetition of the great distater which oc-curred a few years ago at the same colliery. THE FRENCH REPUBLICE

The conflict of testimony us to the intentions f France in relation to sending an ambassador to the Conference is so great, that we can hardof view on the subject between M. Gambetta and M. Jules Favre, which the indications bardly suggest, the real debateably point in the though it has raised great armies; and demanded nind of the Government of National Defence, how best to secure a formal recognition by rise England of the new Government in France, whether by holling absolutely aloof till that recognition is accorded, or by entering the Conference simply to demand that recognition, and retiring if it is not given. For our own part we cannot understand, and believe it to be impossible to defend, the reserve of our Government on this head. There is no doubt at all, we imagine of the fact that Lord Lyons, though ordered to keep up practical relations with the new French Executive, is still accredited to the Government of the Emperor, who has ceased to hold any sort of p wer in France for more than four months, and that we decline to accordanything more than a de facto recognition to the only Government which wields any power in France at all, except the Government of the invader. The estensible reasons alleged for JUSTICE IN WESTERN AUSTRALIA. (South Australian Chronicle, December, 10) The vagaries of the Judicial Bench in various British dependencies too often farnish the subject of burning indignation, bitter jest, or severe comment. It seems strange that while in the old country the Judges for accorpast have, with few exceptions, preserved the confidence of snitors and the respect of the public, yet in some half a dozen colonies, occupants of the Judicial office bave succeeded in placing themselves of all this, our Government still stands n violent hostility to the Executive and the aloof, and does not think it right to acknow-Legislature, and provoking the deserved anger or ridicule of the communities amongst which they are supposed to dispense justice. The Judge sentenced the Stirlings to one month's imprisonment in the common good of Perth, and Mr. fine of £100, and the three editors were taken into custody by the Sheriff. His Honor then ordered a writ to be issued against Mr. Parker on account of his letter published in the Inquirer. On the editorial trio arriving at their dungeon, the Stirlings acted consistently with their conduct at Court, and forwarded to the Judge a most humiliating apology. Mr. Shonton also showed that he believed the days of martyrdom, like those of chivalry, were gone for ever. He would not wait to be a popular victim, but before there was time for the slightest public de constrution in his favor, penned a most grovelling and abject speed for mercy, and confession of guilt. Гриманц'я Демения. Prussia had suffered too much under the first Frouch Empire over again to put her trust in out the couple, the bride darted suddenly into traditions of the past. She had made perfectly casy for herself that which in other countries ! could not by any amount of outlay and exertion be brought to pass. She could lay her hands at any moment on some hundreds of thousands of trained soldiers, and she gave herself to the important task of educating officers and non-commissioned officers to command them. In arranging this mutter, she did not sit down contented with such schools as adhered to old theories, and blow their own trumpets. at Vinceinnes, at Motz, at Olmutz, at Wiener Neustadt, at Woolwich, and at Sandburst Sho was not satisfied to have her Minister of War altending to details and signing endless forms in his office, or her Commander-in-Obief looking to points of discipline, and compiling or sinctioning new drill-books at her Horse Guards, or her Finance Minister thinking of little else than how best to keep down the estimates, and be cheered in the House of Com. mone. She was not content to send into districts general officers with their sons as sides de-camp, and possibly their nephaws for brigade-majors, who might put a few regiments from time to time through parade movements, and then pronounce them perfect. Some of these things she did, or things like them, but stop there she did not. Schools of elementary instruction in military matters she had in abundance. Her Cadetten houses sent a fair proportion of ensigns to the army. Herischools for noncommissioned officers supplied it with well-instructed sergeunts. Her division schools were peared, and was preparing to protest strongly open for the instruction in higher things of officers of the line who had learned their regimental duty.-And the schools of special inetruction for artillery and engineers left nothing to be desired. But she wisely looked beyond all this. A Morak Wedding.

Magazine.

(From "Tent life in Siberia, and adventures among the Koraks and other tribes in Kamtchatka and Northern Asia." By George Kennan ) The marriage ceremony of the Koruks is especially remarkable for its entire originality, and for the indifference which it manifests to the sensibilities of the bridgeroom. In no other country does there exist such a curious mixture of sense and absurdity as that which is dignified in the social life of the Koraks with the name of marriage; and among no other people, let us charitably hope, is the unfortunate bridegroom subjected to such humiliating indignities. The contemplation of marriage is, or ought to be, a very serious thing to every young man; but to a Korak of average sensibility it must be absolutely appalling. No other proof of bravery need ever be exhibited than a certificate of marriage, (if the Koraks have such documents,) and the bravery rises (THE commodious GODOWN, OFFICES into positive heroism when a man marries two or three times. I once knew a Korak in Kamtchakta who had four wives, and I felt as much tion of Messrs. FARRELMAN & Co., and situatespect for his heroic bravery as if he had ted in Webster Bazakir, Queen's Road Central charged with the Six Hundred at Balaklava. For narticulars apply to Messrs, RAWLING. The ceremony, I believe, has never been described; and inadequate as a description may be to convey an idea of the reality, it will perhaps enable American lovers to realize what a calamity they escaped when they were born in America and not in Kamtchatka. The young Korak's troubles begin when he first falls in love; this, like Achilles' wrath, is "the direful apring of woes unnumbered." If his intentions are serious, he calls upon the dameel's father and makes formal proposals for her hand, ascertains the amount of her dower in reindeer, and learns her estimated value. Hais probably told that he must A. H. PRICE, Est., containing Seven Rooms work for his wife two or three years—a rather Store Room, Four Bath Rooms, Stabling, and severe trial of any young mon's affection. He Garden. Gas and Water laid on Apply to then seeks an interview with the young lady THOS. W. BARRINGTON. berself, and performe the agreeable or disagreeable duty which corresponds in Korak to the civilized custom of "popping the question." We had hoped to get some valuable hints from the Koraks as to the best method which their experience auggested for the auccessful accomhment of this delicate task; but we could earn nothing which would be applicable to the more artificial relations of civilized society. If the young man's sentiments are reciprocated, and he obtains a positive promise of marriage, he goes cheerfully to work, like Ferdinand in "The Tempest" for Miranda's father, and spends 'two or three years in outting and drawing wood, watching reindeer, making sledges, and contributing generally to the interests of his prospective father in-law. At the end this probationary period comes the grand "experimentum crucie," which is to decide his fate and prove the success or the uselessness of his long labour. At this interesting crisis we had surprised our Korak friends in the third encampment. The tent which we had entered was an unusually large, one, containing twenty-six "pologs," arranged in a continuous circle around its inner circumference. The open space in the centre around Fletcher & Co.'s old premises, at present in octhe fire was crowded with the dusky faces cupation of the Military. and half-shaven heads of the Korak spectators, whose attention seemed about equally divided between sundry kettles and troughs of "manyalls," boiled venison, marrow, frozen tallow, and similar delicacies, and the discassion of some controverted point of marriage etiquette. Owing to my ignorance of the language. I was not able to enter thoroughly into the merits of the disputed question; but it seemed to be ably argued on both sides. Our sudden entrance seemed to create a temporary diversion from the legitimate business of the evening. The tattooed women and shaven-headed men stared in open-mouthed astonishment at the pale-faced guests who had come unbidden to the murriage-feast, having on no wedding gar-ments. Our faces were undeniably dirty, our blue hunting shirts and buck-skin pants bore the marks of two months rough travel, in numerous, rips, tears, and tatters, which were only partially masked by a thick covering of reindeer hair from our fur "kookblankas." Our general appearance, in fact, suggested a more intimate acquaintance with dirty "yourts," indifference of men who were used to it, and sipped our hot tea while waiting for the ceremony to begin. I looked curiously around to see if I could distinguish the happy caudidates for matrimonial honours; but they were evidently concealed in one of the closed pologa. The eating and drinking seemed by this time to be about finished, and art air of expectation and suspense pervaded the entire crowd. Sud: denly we were startled by the loud and regular beating of a native "baraban" or bass THAT very desirable BUNGALOW, situate drum, which fairly filled the tent with a volume T at Polifocium, and known as "BEL: of sound. At the same instant the tent opened to permit the passage of a till, etern-looking Menke. Esq. Bowling Alley, Coach House, Korak, with an armful of willow sprouts and alder branches, which he proceeded to distribute in all the pologe of the tent. "What do you suppose that's for?" asked Dodd in an under-tone. "I don't know," was the reply;

"keep quiet and you'll see." The regular throbs of the dram continued throughout the distrienergy until it swelled into a wild, barbarons chant, timed by the regular beats of the heavy drain. A slight commotion followed, the front curtains of all the pologe were thrown up, the women stationed themselves in detachments of two or three at the entrance of each polog, and took up the willow branches which had been provided. In a moment a venerable native, whom we presumed to be the father of one of the parties, emerged from one of the pologs pitch of frenzy, the music redoubled its rapimountain thickets, and Siberian storms, than sorntiny of the assemblage, however, with the

dity, the men in the centre of the tent joined in the uncouth chant, and uttered at short intervals peculiar shrill cries of wild excitement. At a given signal from the native who had led the first polog, and began a rapid flight around the tent, raising the curtains between the nologa successively, and passing under. The bridegroom instantly followed in hot pursuit; but the women who were stationed in each compartment throw every possible impediment n his way, tripping up his unwary feet, holding down the ourtains to prevent his passage, and applying the willow and alder switches unmercifully to a very susceptible part of his body as he stooped to raise them. The air was filled with drum-beats, shouts of encouragement and derision, and the sound of the heavy blows which were administered to the unlucky bridegroom by each successive detachment of women as he ran the gauntlet. It became evident at once that despite his most violent efforts be would fail to overtake the flying Atalanta before she completed the circuit of the tent. Even the golden apples of Hesperides would have availed him little against such disbeartoning odds; but with undismayed perseverance he pressed on, stumbling headlong over the outstretched feet of his female persecutors, and getting constantly entangled in the ample folds of the reindeer-skin curtains, which were thrown with the skill of a matador over his head and eyes. In a moment the bride had entered the last closed polog near the door, while the unfortunate bridegroom was still struggling with his accumulating misfortunes about half way around the tent," I expected to see him relax his efforts and give up the contest when the bride dimpin his behalf against the unfairness of the trial but, to my surprise he still struggled on, and with a final plungs burst through the curtains of the last polog and rejained his bride. The music suddenly ceased, and the throng begin to stream out of the tent. The ocramony was evidently over. - Turning to Mercueff, who with year all the theoretical knowledge that might inquired what it all meant. "Were they mar- and not exceed- 3 " object was, and experience proves that she has polog, and if he caught her there it was ing...... work two years for a wife, undergo a severe the military districts forms in point of fact the part of the bride. His faith in her constance must be unlimited. The intention of the whole ceremony was evidently to give the woman an apportunity to marry the man or not, as she chose, since it was obviously impossible for him to catch her under such circumstances, unless but by themselves reducing to practice, as far as circumstances will allow, the theoretical lore she voluntarily waited for him in one of the which was imparted to them eisewhere. pologs. The plan shewed a more chivalrous regard and deference for the wishes and pre-" Why is Prussia Victorious ?" in Blackwood's ferences of the gontler sex than is common in an unreconstructed state of society; but it seemed to me, as an unprejudiced observer. that the same result might have been obtained without so much abuse of the unfortunate bridegroom. Some regard ought to have been paid to his feelings, if he was a man. I could not ascertain the significance of the chastisement which was inflicted by the women upon the bridegroom with the willow switches. Dodd suggested that it might be emblematical of married life-a sort of foreshadowing of future domestic experience; but in view of the musculine Korak character, this hardly seemed
